

Personal Reflection Exercises...

It is easy for me to exceed expectations at work.

It is easy for me to exceed expectations at work.

It is easy for me to exceed expectations at work by constantly striving for excellence. I recognize that it is commonplace to get by with as little effort as possible in the workplace, which means that by investing myself in my job, I am bound to stand out from the crowd.

I have balance in my life and leave work at work for the sake of my family, friendships, and creative personal life. When I am at work, I give it my total focus. I set up my schedule and my workspace to minimize distractions so I can be as productive as possible.

It is a privilege to be employed and I respect that privilege by using my employer's resources effectively and efficiently.

I also stand out when I take advantage of self-improvement opportunities, both through work and outside of it. By continuing to learn and develop my skills, I enable myself to surpass my expectations.

Self-Reflection Questions:

1. How do I exceed expectations at work?
2. Do I treat my time at work with the respect it deserves?
3. How am I taking advantage of the opportunity to learn and develop my skills?
